nouns formed from verbs, expressing the action of result, product, material, etc. (the art of building; a cotton wadding). It is also used to form nouns from verbs (offing; shirting). Compare -ING². [ME; OE imling the present participle of verbs (walking; thinking, being often used as participial adjectives: warfare -INC¹. [ME -ing, -inge; the var. -in (usu. representing -in') continues ME -inde, -ende; OE -ende] The common suffix -INC² can be pronounced in (-ing) or (-in). The two pronunciations reflect the -in against another (velar vs. alveolar) and not, as is most, "dropping the g," since no actual g-sound is intended; we use both (-ing) and (-in), depending on speed or relative formality of the occasion. For some educated, in the southern United States and Britain, (-in) is pronunciation, while others use (-ing) virtually always. Variation from perceived authorities, many American will ordinarily use (-in) at least some of the time effort to say (-ing); however informal the usage "one belonging to," "of the kind of," "one derived sometimes having a diminutive force, formerly of nouns: bunting; fairing; gelding; shilling; trove. [ME, OE -ing, c. ON: -ingr, -ungr; Go: -ings] #. In gather'ar, v.t. 1. to gather or bring in. —v.i.
